Exhaustive search has failed to discover any Richard Bickford, a maker of locks in London, at the period ascribed to the lock. It is well known that the custom prevailed of marking the London dealers name on goods supplied by provincial makers, and from the similarity of workmanship and design, from its period and inscription, little doubt can exist that John Wilkes was the maker, and that it was probably a show lock for the window of a London tradesmen. A third lock of similar beauty and workmanship, although somewhat smaller, is now in the Birmingham Art Gallery, on loan from the South Kensington Museum. It is of steel, with brass case, pierced with foliage, and measures j inches by five. The inscription, in deeply cut italic letters with flourished capitals, is Johannes fVikes, Fecit de Birmingham. The Athen. eum for 1847, p. 863, in a report of the meeting of the Archaeological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland, held at Norwich in that year, thus refers to another of John Wilkes locks: A small brass lock, a curious specimen of Birmingham workmanship of the 17th century, the makers name was John Wilkes, and in the front was a figure in high relief whose spur and boot acted as a cover and tell-tale to the keyhole. I copied the inscription because I thought it extremely curious: If I had ye gift of tongue I would declare and do no wrong Who they are yt come...
