Mrs. L. , referred by Dr. Bowell. The patient is a housewife, 24 years old. Family history negative. Previous history has had no bearing upon the case until four years ago, when the patient experienced an attack of dysuria, lasting three or four weeks, not confining her to her bed, and not accompanied by other symptoms. Similar attacks have occurred at irregular intervals since this time, and about two years ago soreness developed to the left of the mid-line over the bladder region. There has been a loss of 10 to 12 pounds in weight during the past year Fig. I. and a sense of discomfort is now present in the bladder region at all times. There is no history of severe colicky abdominal pains. The patient is constipated. Present Illness: The patient came under observation during an attack of frequent, painful urination. She was emptying the bladder every thirty minutes to an hour and was getting up four to six times at night. The pain was located at the neck of the bladder and was worse after just emptying the bladder. She had never noted blood in the urine. Her appetite was failing and she was then experiencing her first attack of nausea. Physical Examination: Examination of head, neck and chest negative. Palpation over the lower left abdomen detected a soreness without rigidity. Neither kidney could be palpated, while slight tenderness was elicited over the left kidney by deep fist...
